Health report looks at diseases that affect certain ethnicities more

ColoHealth 7/21—The Office of Health Disparities at the Colorado Department of Public Health and Environment on Thursday hosted a “release event” to discuss findings of its annual report on Racial and Ethnic Health Disparities in Colorado 2009, which highlights diseases, disabilities and deaths that disproportionately affect Hispanics/Latinos, African-Americans/Blacks, American Indians and Asians/Pacific Islanders.

Some key findings in the report that were discussed are:

Hispanics/Latinos experience the highest incidence of cervical cancer, deaths from diabetes and motor vehicle injuries, and teen birth rate, but lower rates of diagnosed hypertension and death rates from lung cancer.

African-Americans/Blacks, although they have low rates of binge drinking and steadily declining teen birth rates, have the highest death rates of cancer, specifically lung and prostate, and the highest rate of diagnosed hypertension and deaths from heart disease.

American Indians experience the highest death rate from diabetes and high rates of smoking, binge drinking and adult obesity. They also have the lowest overall death rate, and the lowest death rates for breast cancer, heart disease, cancer, Alzheimer’s disease and suicide.

Asian American/Pacific Islanders experience the highest incidence of tuberculosis and chronic hepatitis B and the highest death rate for cervical cancer. They have the lowest rates of adult obesity and smoking, and the lowest death rates for heart disease, cancer and infant mortality.

Known as health disparities, these differences in health status, access to health care and quality of care among these groups are present at the national, state and local levels.

Mauricio Palacio, director of the department’s Office of Health Disparities, said, “Communities of color are disproportionately affected in all health areas, including chronic disease, communicable disease, injury, and maternal and child health.”

Dr. Ned Calonge, chief medical officer at the department, added, “Health disparity issues are critical in health care today. Not all the illness or wellness in the United States affects everyone in an equal way. Some of our state’s poor health aggregates in our communities of color.”

The report documents differences in health outcomes among groups and explores social environments that may impact their health.
